A heartbreak may take many forms: romantic breakup, widowhood, disappointment with one's child or one's parent, loss of friendship, loss of professional identity, loss of one's house, fortune, country...

Anyone and anything we love can break the heart and transform us into a miserable beggar for love. None of the usual admonitions to let go, and none of the popular theories based on stages of mourning have succeeded in providing healing, because they fail to take into account what happens in the brain.

The weekend is designed to train therapists, health professionals, and individuals in the new approaches, where neuroscience concur with depth psychology. The goal is a liberation of the heart, what neuroscientists call an "evolutionary jump", a process similar to a Dionysian initiation that breaks you open.

You don't want to miss this ... push from Nature.
